2008 High Net

Handicap: 14

Day 1 Matchup: Ben Fry (4)

Assignment: Photographer

Roommate: Steve Hale

2008/'09 Recap: Dave takes a year off after capturing the 2008 High Net Title by twelve car-lengths and fearing his pole position in his race for the first back-to-back High Net Title since Joe did it in '01/'02. '08 wasn't a total wash-out for Dave, however, as he purchased Greg in the Calcutta while hopped-up on Apple Pie and picked up some 3rd place prize-money for his trouble.

2010 Outlook: Return of the King. 2010 promises to be a new year at the Summit for our adorable little buddy. With an additional two shots on most of the field and Ben in the first round, Dave has never been in better position to stir things up. Having spent the last year (and 3 rounds) focusing on little other than his golf game, this could truly be his year! (to win a match) Then again. . . maybe not. Regardless, no one is more perfectly suited to fill the void left by our reigning Hapless Sap, Chris', disappointing withdrawal than Dave, and the Summit is thrilled to have him back. Don't worry about the golf—just enjoy the camaraderie. Welcome back, Dave!

Most Similar Super Hero Havok

The superhero figure which I most resemble would be Havok.....which is exactly what I will raise on the field in Summit 11. Immune to the intense heat which he creates, Havok can channel all his energy in a single direction while absorbing the cosmic energy given off by other superheroes into the cells of his body. Like John Daly at Crooked Stick...this last minute replacement plans on shocking the world by capturing the 2010 Summit Championship. Havok's weapons will likely include Daly's Wilson "Firesticks". Every ounce of Havok's powers will be directed at "Fry-ing" Ben in the first round. After that shocker, the heat will be far too much for the other superheroes to contend with.

Brother to Cyclops & Vulcan, the middle of Corsair's sons. Havok was team leader of X-Factor & the Brotherhood. He was Mutant X trapped in another reality. Currently in space, Havok leads a small group of X-Men and the remains of the Starjammers fighting the Shi'Ar Empire. Havok is a extremely powerful mutant possessing the power to absorb ambient cosmic energy, process it and emanate it from his body as waves of energy that heat the air in the path, turning it into plasma in the form of a blast or discharge, with a tell-tale concentric circle pattern. He is immune to the adverse effects of most forms of radiation and heat. In the past, he was not entirely able to control this ability, which made him a danger to those around him unless he wore a special containment suit equipped with special sensors for measuring and controlling his power output

Most Similar Cartoon Character Charlie Brown

Dave, originally nominated for acceptance into the Summit inner-circle by Bo, was, at first, an all but unknown quantity from both a golfing and personal standpoint. It didn't take long, however, for him to firmly establish his reputation in both categories— as a happy-go-lucky 'Good-Time Charlie' on a personal level, and an unhappy, luckless 'Henry the Hacker' on the course. Like Charlie Brown and the football, no matter how many times he tries to break out and win a match, some 'Lucy' is always there to snatch it away at the last minute. His on course desperation, however, in no way discourages Dave from belly-ing-up to the bar and yukking-it-up with his cronies in the clubhouse. All he needs is a zig-zag shirt. Good grief!

Charlie Brown is a loveable loser, a child possessed of endless determination and hope, but who is ultimately dominated by his insecurities and a "permanent case of bad luck," and often taken advantage of by his peers. He also has a sense of reality about him, usually making sarcastic jibes or using quick-witted remarks to point out the often ridiculous actions of some of the other characters. He commonly wears black shorts, yellow socks and brown shoes.
